About this 'Dirty List'

We have produced this list in order to highlight the role of international companies in assisting the military to continue to commit human rights violations, and to highlight the role of international companies which operate in the country in a way that contributes to human rights violations and environmental destruction. We hope that being named on this list will prompt some companies to end their involvement with the military or operations linked to human rights and environmental problems. In doing so, they act as a warning to other companies.

This list is an ongoing project by Burma Campaign UK and will be regularly updated. We welcome suggestions for companies that should be included on this list. Please email mark.farmaner@burmacampaign.org.uk with details. Sources of information provided will be treated in confidence. We are aware that this list is by no means comprehensive. The OECD has estimated that the military controlled Union of Myanmar Economic Holdings Ltd (UMEH) alone has at least 50 joint ventures with international companies. Information on UMEH and the other military conglomerate, Myanmar Economic Corporation (MEC) and all their subsidiaries is mostly not publicly available.

Burma Campaign UK decided to resume publication of this 'Dirty List' after consultation with partners from Burma and our supporters. Detailed information about the thinking behind this list is available in our briefing here: <http://burmacampaign.org.uk/media/Is-it-time-to-revive-the-Dirty-List.pdf>

Criteria for companies being placed on the list

Supplying the military with arms or any other equipment or services of any kind, directly or indirectly, and doing business of any kind with the military and military owned and controlled companies, including companies of individuals in or closely linked to the military (eg if a military person uses his position to promote their business interests but does so in the name of or for the benefit of a relative).

Operations in Burma linked to human rights violations. For example, dams and mines in ethnic states. Operations in Burma linked to environmental destruction. Including, for example, dams not meeting standards of the World Commission on Dams (WCD) recommendations or coal extraction and use. All information is based on the best information we are able to obtain. Where possible we use public sources. Companies may be placed on the list without making sources public if we are confident of the source and cannot release the information for security reasons.

All companies are notified in advance that we intend to place them on the Dirty List. We are willing to engage in dialogue regarding the information we have on their operations and will immediately correct any incorrect information, with a public record of that correction.

We are willing to engage in dialogue with companies but only on the basis that we are discussing when and how they end their involvement with the military or human rights violations. We are not willing to engage in dialogue which is designed by the company to lead to an endless process in order for them to be able to tell shareholders and stakeholders that they are engaged in dialogue, then throw a few dollars at a local health clinic and post pictures of smiling local people on their website.

In general, but at our discretion, we will publish responses from companies unless there is good reason not to do so.

Facebook

Facebook is American company specialising in social media. It has consistently allowed its platform to be used to incite hatred and violence of minorities in Burma, in particular the Rohingya Muslim minority and Muslims in general. Numerous complaints were ignored by the company.

Although it has belatedly closed down accounts run by the Burmese military, it continues to host the page of the Information Committee, formerly State Counsellor Information Committee, which is run from Aung San Suu Kyi's office. Since 2016 this was one of the main official government/military pages on Facebook used for inciting fear and hatred of the Rohingya, including the notorious 'Fake Rape' poster denying that independently verified claims of rape of Rohingya women by the Burmese military are true.

Facebook have been severely criticised by civil society in Burma, and by the United Nations, for their lack of action in addressing hate speech. Although they have now taken some steps to address this, the United Nations Fact Finding Mission has asked them to do more, including commissioning an independent examination of what has taken place on their platform.

Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd (HAL)

HAL is an Indian Aerospace company which manufactures military aircraft. In 2007 it received international criticism, including from Burma Campaign UK, for its plans to sell helicopters to the Burmese military.

HAL is reportedly planning to try to sell a weaponised version of its new training aircraft, the HTT-40, to the Burmese military. Full production and export promotion for these aircraft is expected to begin from 2019/2020. Burma Campaign UK is seeking assurances from HAL that it will not go ahead with plans to promote and sell this aircraft to the Burmese military.

Sinohydro Corporation

Sinohydro is a Chinese state-owned construction and hydropower company. It is involved in the construction of dams in Shan State, including the Yeywa dams and Dee Doke dam. In Karen State it is involved in the Hatgyi dam, linked to conflict and human rights violations.

Sinohydro is also involved in the construction of Bhasan Char in the Bay of Bengal, where the government of Bangladesh plans to force up to 1000,000 Rohingya refugees to move to.

Bhasan Char is not suitable for permanent human habitation. It floods during the monsoon, is extremely vulnerable to extreme weather events, and the area is prone to piracy.

Rohingya refugees in Bangladesh have stated that they do not want to be moved to such an inhospitable environment. The proposed move is also being opposed by aid agencies and human rights organisations on humanitarian and human rights grounds.

The United Aircraft Corporation is a part state owned Russian aircraft manufacturer, sanctioned by the European Union following the Russian invasion of Ukraine.

Its subsidiary, the Irkut Corporation, is selling 6 SU-30 fighter jet aircraft to the Burmese military. The sale agreement was announced on 22nd January. The Myanmar Times described the jets as 'suitable for Myanmar's counter-insurgency operations'. Use of fighter jets in so called counter insurgency operations have frequently resulted in injuries and deaths of ethnic civilians.

Irkut Corporation is also selling Yakovlev Yak-130 multi-role combat and training jets to the Burmese military. The jets have reportedly been seen in Kachin state, where jets have killed civilians.

United Aircraft Corporation also manufacture the Sukhoi civilian aircraft brand.
